The Spectrum of Follicular B-Cell Neoplasms: Clonal Evolution of Doxorubicin-Induced Diffuse Large B-Cell Lymphoma in a Mouse Model. Antineoplastic chemotherapy can induce the development of hematologic malignancies that may be the cause of treatment-related lymphoid malignancies. The pathogenesis of these late hematologic malignancies is unknown. We report the first experimentally induced case of drug-induced lymphoma in a mouse model. Specifically, mice exposed to a nonmyelotoxic dose of the anthracycline doxorubicin (DX) developed a thymic B-cell lymphoma. Unlike most murine and human chemotherapy-induced lymphomas, the DX-induced thymic lymphoma was clonal. Analysis of the histopathologic features revealed the presence of aberrant cytologic features, suggesting clonality. This study also demonstrates that atypical lymphoid cells are the probable precursors of a DX-induced lymphoma.//
